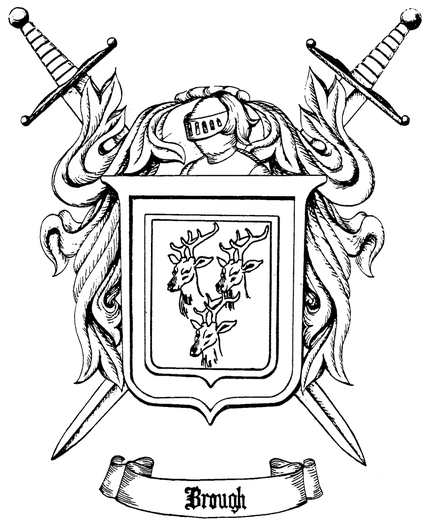
"Brough Ancient" Coat of Arms



THE "BROUGH'S" OF BROUGH, STAFFORDSHIRE, ENGLAND

A Brief History

The family of "Brough" takes its name from Brough (medieval "Burgh", Latin "Burgum"), a hamlet in the south of Ranton (alias Ronton) parish in South Pirehill hundred of the county of Stafford in England. The present Brough Hall (which is close to the ancient boundary with Gnosall parish) stands on the site of the ancient manor house of Brough.

The first surviving reference to "Brough" is in the Domesday Book of 1086. The book states: "The land of Robert de Statford: Robert himself holds in Bu(r)ghale one virgate of land which pertains to Halstone..." "Bu(r)ghale" is taken to represent the Old English "burh halh", or "Brough hamlet"; "burh" or "Brough" itself is a common English placename meaning "camp, fortification, or manorhouse".

In 1199 AD, we find a man named Philip fitz Bishop adopting the surname "de Burgo" from Brough, as he appears as Philip de Burgo in a list of jurors to Staffordshire Assizes. His brother Hamon also appears to have taken the surname "de Burgo" around this same time period. Around the mid-1200's, the name "de Burgo" was changed to "de Burgh". At about 1400, the de Burgh's settled in Brewood, and by the early 1500's they had established themselves in Leek. The name "Burgh" gradually changed to "Brough" by the late 1500's.

From the early 1500's to the present, the Brough's and their descendants have continued to live in Leek, Staffordshire, England, as well as establishing themselves in nearby counties. In fact, the estate manor known as "Windygates" in Leek, has been held by Brough descendants for many decades.

In the 1700's, several Brough families moved into the nearby parishes of Ipstones, Wolstanton, Burslem, Trentham and Stoke on Trent. In 1856, three members of the Richard Brough and Mary Horleston family left England and emigrated to the United States of America, eventually settling in the State of Utah. Many of their descendants presently live in Utah and nearby states.

Royal Ancestry of the "Brough's"

As has been noted above, the "Brough" surname originated with Philip fitz Bishop and his brother Hamon in the late 1100's AD. Philip and Hamon are descendants of Ralph de Limesi, who was the son of Adelaide, Countess of Aumale. Adelaide was the full sister of William the Conqueror, and the daughter of Robert I, Duke of Normandy.

In addition, Thomas Brough (1595) married Elizabeth Cotton, who was the daughter of Walter Cotton and Elizabeth Young. Following the Young line back in time we enter into the lineages of Charleton, Mortimer and Stafford, and then into the Royal lineage pedigrees through Llewelyn ap Iorworth, and into the Kings of England through Gilbert de Clare and Joan of Acre--daughter or King Edward I of England.

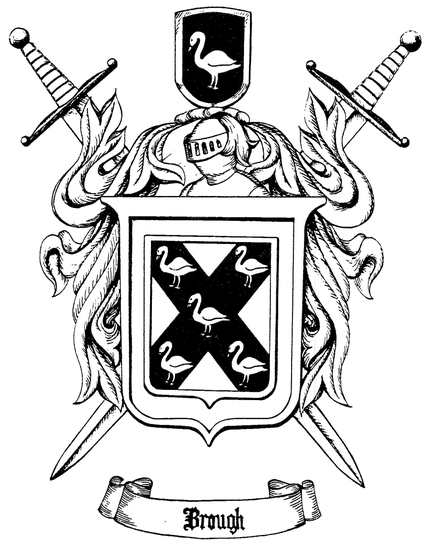
The information included in the genealogies listed on this chart has been gathered from published materials and books that are documented in the "References & Sources" section on this chart.

It should be recognized that the earlier genealogies and events listed on this chart are based upon very limited and somewhat questionable sources. In fact, individuals should consider data earlier than 750 AD (with the possible exception of Christ's genealogy in the Bible) as having varying degrees of accuracy, fact and mythology, and this should be kept in mind when considering these earlier genealogies.

The "Brough" Coat of Arms



THE "BROUGH" COAT OF ARMS

Mr. David Bethell, a Professional Genealogist who has done extensive research on the Brough ancestry of Staffordshire, England, has written:

"It is now clear that the 'buck's shield' was the ancient Brough coat of arms. It is not uncommon for families to find that the earliest members used different arms, and usually both shields are displayed; the swan coat would be called 'Brough', the bucks heads coat 'Brough Ancient'....

"The Brough's of Leek, and the Knightleys of Fawsley, bore a coat of arms attributed to the Brough's of Brough by heralds in the 16th century: Argent, on a saltire sable, five swans argent. We have been able to establish that the Brough's of Brough [in Ranton, Staffordshire] did not in fact use these arms, their seals displaying one or three buck's heads. The earliest version found was a single buck's head with a cross between the antlers. The swan shield used by their descendants in the 16th century and later properly belonged to a Yorkshire and north country family by the name of Brough, quite unconnected with the Staffordshire family.

"Thus in 1564, the Knightleys of Fawsley bore a coat of arms of twelve quarterings, of which two were derived from the Brough connection. These were 3 Brough (the swan coat) and 4 Cowley (Argent, a lion, a bordure engrailed sable) By 1681, however, the family had had exhaustive research conducted into the family archives by a genealogist--probably Sir William Dughale. It was discovered that the arms attributed to the Broughs and Cowleys were both incorrect, and the correct coats (styled Brough Ancient and Cowley Ancient) were incorporated together with the arms used previously as the 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th quarterings of a shield which now embraced no less than 27 coats of arms.

"The two figures attributed to the ancient Brough coat by the Knighleys were gules and or, i.e. three bucks' heads in gold on a red shield. It is quite possible that there existed at that period representations of the ancient coats of arms on monuments or in stained glass, and that these colors are correct, but equally they may be hypothetical...."

This and other information provided to the Richard Brough Family Organization indicates that the "de Burgo's" and "Burgh's" of Brough, Ranton, Staffordshire, England, used the "Brough Ancient" Coat of Arms, mainly of "three buck's head", and possibly of "gold on a red shield" between 1150 to 1400 AD. Their later descendents, who eventually resided at Windygates, Leek, Staffordshire, England, used the "Brough" Coat of Arms, of "Argent, on a saltire sable, five swans argent" between 1500 and 1650 AD. These two "Brough" Coat of Arms are displayed in pictorial form on this chart (although the pictorial drawings, due to limited information, may not be exact or near replicas of the original Coat of Arms).
